

STANDARDS REVIEW MATERIALS

General Information

- Standards review materials are recommended because they serve at least one or a combination of three purposes: 1.) review of the course content standards, 2.) re-teaching of course content standards, 3.) review of course content standards in a high stakes test prep format (meaning that the standard review question looks like it will look on the student's high stakes test). The below standards review materials are recommended because they have shown to excel in at least one of these three areas.
- The questions in standards review materials are linked to the standard they are reviewing usually through the use of a grid or chart in the back of the teacher book. Upon completion, the teacher can determine what standards the student has mastered and what standards the student still needs to review.
- In more recent years, the mainline publishers began to publish their own standard review materials. These are especially helpful because the grid or chart not only identifies the standards needing review, but it identifies the lessons in the book where that standard was initially taught, making re-teaching an easier task for the teacher. While the quality of the mainline publisher standards review materials is usually very good, the downside is that they can also be more expensive. I have felt the extra price for mainline publisher standards review materials is worth it when purchasing 5th grade CA science, 8th grade CA history, 8th grade CA science, and end-of-course standards review materials for high school courses such as CA Earth Science, CA Biology, CA Algebra 2, and CA Geometry, to name a few. Some of the mainline publisher standards review teacher manuals will explain not only why the answer was correct, but it will explain why each of the other three answers were incorrect. This is a valuable teaching tool, especially for students that are not good test takers.
- Standards review materials are also helpful tools for parents whose educational philosophy makes it more challenging to cover the required standards in one particular school year.
